Environmental challenges fueled in large part by rapid industrial development and deforestation sharpen inequalities in many Asian and Pacific countries, according to the report. Across Eastern Europe and Central Asia, human development levels continue to rise, with greater equality than other areas of the developing world, the 2011 reports show, but internal income gaps are widening in many countries, and environmental deterioration could also potentially hinder gains in the region. By 2050, projecting recent positive regional human development trends forward, Sub-Saharan Africa's average Human Development Index (HDI) score - the composite measure of income, health and education reporting - will rise by an estimated 44%. 'Arab Spring' the need for broader, greener development, says human development report, realizing truly sustainable development in the Arab states will require bolder action on internal inequalities and environmental risks, says the 2011 human development report, released today by the United Nations Development Program (UNDP). The report seeks to identify ways in which sustainability and equity can be advanced together. It also confronts the climate challenges with calls for new sources of financing to help pay for balanced development and a shift to renewable energy. The 2011 Human Development Index covers 187 countries and territories, places Norway at the top, Dr. Congo, Norway, Australia and the Netherlands lead the world in the 2011 Human Development Index (HDI), while the Democratic Republic of Congo, Niger and Burundi are at the bottom of the annual human development report's rankings of national achievement in health, education and income. Today by the United Nations Development Program (UNDP). The relatory a e a e o e "Sustainability and Equity: Better Future for All" - argues that urgent global challenges of sustainability and equity should be addressed in conjunction" and identifies policies that are mutually reinforcing national and worldwide, which can stimulate progress towards the consecution of these interconnected objectives. The 2011 Human Development Report, published today by the United Nations Development Program (UNDP), states that the constant advances in human development in the sub-Saharan Africa can stagnate and even reverse, unless Bold measures are taken to reduce environmental risks and inequalities in the region around the world. The 2011 "Sustainability and Equity: Better Future for All" defends that environmental sustainability can be achieved more fairly and efficiently, addressing the disparities of health, education, Income and Gless, along with the need for global action in the energy production and protection of the ecosystem.
